From The Rabbi's Desk

When introducing the family of the כהנים, the Torah speaks of the children of אהרן and states נִימַת נָדָב וַאֲבִיהֶם לְפָנֵי ה' בְּהִקְרָבָם אֵשׁ זָרָה . . . וּבָנִים לֹא הָיוּ לָהֶם - And Nadav and Avihu died before Hashem, when they offered strange fire before Hashem. . . and they had no children. It seems odd that Torah mentions here that נדב ואביהו had no children. How is that relevant to the fact that they were punished for offering a strange fire?

The סופר offers two potential answers. First, he notes that people become more responsible when they become parents. Had נדב ואביהו had children they would have thought twice before offering a strange fire. Alternatively, he offers that had נדב ואביהו been parents, Hashem would have taken into consideration the fact that killing them would have left their children as orphans. Since the children would not deserve that fate, they would have been spared. Both answers point to the same idea, that children would have saved נדב ואביהו.

One of the most basic concepts in Judaism is the idea of מסורה which charges each generation with the obligation to raise the next generation with a commitment to Jewish laws and values. There are those who see this as a costly and costly burden which they do begrudgingly do. We see from here that it is not only what we give to our children but also what we get. The process of child rearing makes us better people and benefits us in how Hashem relates to us.
